

LET ME IN

A Japanese American Woman Crashes the Corporate Club 1976 – 1996

FROM THE MOMENT ELAINE KOYAMA WAS HIRED as a management trainee at agri-business giant Cargill, Inc. she found herself entangled in the endless fight to wedge herself through the doors the women's movement opened. In Let Me In, Koyama shares the true story of how she fought her way through the corporate jungle before the term “glass ceiling” was even coined.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

ELAINE KOYAMA grew up on a sheep, wheat, and sugar beet farm in eastern Montana. The youngest of eight sansei (third-generation) Japanese American siblings, she graduated from Stanford then spent 20 years at Cargill, 20 years as an entrepreneur and is now embarking on a writing career. Her most recent adventure took her on a 10,000 mile, 13 state solo road trip where she skied 300,000 vertical feet at 20 mountain resorts.
